CPW Report No. 36--USSR

(May 13-26, 1952)

SUMMARY

There is a mounting volume of collective letters to Stalin from various industries and construction projects containing familiar promises to rectify existing shortcomings and/or multiply the successes already achieved. PRAVDA hints that such pledges are easier made than kept, and urges far greater efforts toward their materialization. Some regional transmitters still echo PRAVDA's recent editorial reminding their listeners that the so-called Socialist custody of property and equipment by individual workers is a thing of the past, and centralized responsibility is again the order of the day. Weaknesses in the Building Materials, Communications, and Coal industries get some attention, as does public welfare.

In the field of ideology, attention is called to the "voice of public opinion" (golos obshchestvennosti) which is said to be neglected too often. The Ukrainians are again reminded that for their present state of "complete unification" they are heavily indebted to their "beloved elder brother", the Great Russian Nation. The Soviet State and Party "superstructure" is to continue its existence so long as the non-Soviet world does, according to Prof. Stepanyan.
